

06

Bestselling read

Never judge a Stephen King book by its cover

● Look at that cover. Doesn't exactly scream 'Read me by the pool on your summer holiday', does it? But if any author's guaranteed to up your heart rate while you suck back cocktails on a sun lounger, it's Stephen King. In the first of two eagerly anticipated 2014 books by the horror writer, King delivers his first detective novel, in which a retired cop is haunted by a case that saw a lone killer plough his car into crowds at a fair. Expect page-turning suspense, jaw-dropping twists and all the addictive brilliance of a classic Stephen King.

Contains no evil clowns

07

Jesus complex

Find out if Lily Allen's found God

● Calling a comeback album Sheezus is down to one of two things: a shock tactic to get yourself noticed, or an attempt to buddy up with God. We gave Lily Allen's album an airing to see if she's trying to secure a place inside the pearly gates...

Godly Lily

08

Lady love

Cheer the return of Amanda Byram

Chainmail is so hot right now

● It was a sad day in veg-out TV history when the big red balls of Total Wipeout were finally deflated in 2012. Watching cash-hungry lunatics getting punched in the plums by pneumatic boxing gloves, crawling through stinking mud and careering spectacularly off claret spherical deathtraps was ideal set-brain-to-stupid telly. It wasn't big. It wasn't hard, and it wasn't clever. But it was exactly what a man needed for 60 minutes each and every weekend. In fact, there was only one reason you needed to keep a part of your grey matter firing: to witness the supremely hot Irish model-turned-presenter Amanda Byram. But there's no need to rouse yourself from your vegetative sofa state just yet. The queen of comfort TV returns this month in RV Rampage – a show that pitches five couples against each other in adrenaline-fuelled challenges, all while driving motorhomes around New Zealand. It sounds utterly stupid. Or insanely brilliant. Possibly both. But if anything's certain, it's that Amanda will make everything OK again.

RV Rampage starts on 26 May at 9pm on Travel Channel (Freeview 42, Sky 252)