

POO SMEARED IN ASDA SHOPPING

A WOMAN reached into a delivery of online shopping – and found the bag smeared in poo.

Natasha Tindall, 21, screamed in horror after finding the faeces stuck to a wine bottle.

She spent hours trying to wash off the smell and now wants answers from Asda over how the £50 order was contaminated.

Mum Julie, 43, said: "We were disgusted."

"We picked up the shopping seconds after the driver dropped it off so there is no chance it could have been an Smelly... poo discovered on wine animal messing in our street. When I rang Asda to complain, I was given a ridiculous answer of, 'There are not any animals in our warehouses, madam'.

EXCLUSIVE by DEAN WILKINS

"I felt like I was not being taken seriously. I'm not someone who complains a lot but this was just ridiculous."

Julie says she phoned minutes after the smelly find and again three days later when the complaints team didn't contact her. Asda said it was at a loss over how the poo got there.

It apologised and has offered a full refund.

43k-mile bike ride

A TRAVEL writer is back home after spending four years cycling 43,000 miles around the globe.

Charlie Walker, 27, was suspected of being a spy in Iran. He was mistaken for Jesus in Africa and arrested in China as he crossed more than 60 countries for charity.

After returning to Bowerchalke, Wilts, he said: "I'm not really a cyclist, the bike was a cheap and slow means to an end."

SPLATTE

A coffee shop boss shot his pal dead during horseplay with an "unloaded" gun in Croatia.

SCOTS BGT STAR

'I'm trying to get away from the snobbery'

LOOKING SWELL IN FASHION

SHOOT

NOTE PERFECT... Lucy on BGT, left, and with opera superstar Andrea Bocelli, right

BEVVY OF BEAUTY... Lucy reckons the black stuff will protect her killer curves

I'm downing pints of Guinness to make my boobs bigger*

Says opera beauty LUCY KAY

BRITAIN'S Got Talent star Lucy Kay knows the breast things come to those who wait – by guzzling Guinness to boost her cleavage.

Gorgeous opera singer Lucy's hectic schedule has put the sexy curves she displayed on the ITV talent show in danger of withering away.

But men all around the world owe her long-term boyfriend David a pint or two for encouraging Lucy to get stuck into the Irish stout to bolster her boobs.

Glasgow-based Lucy – who was runner-up on BGT earlier this year – said: "I was nine and a half stone and I'm just under nine stone now in just two weeks. David is a big boob man. I was like, 'How can you tell I've lost weight?' And he says, 'Well, they're not as big.'"

"It's the first place the weight goes off. I'm gutted. He said, 'You need to keep drinking Guinness. I remember a time when you used to drink Guinness all the time and they used to be so perky.'"

"So he put me on a diet of Guinness. I'm having one a night.

"I don't mind a skinnier waist but I like my curves and I like to keep them. I went out for a drink last night and David was lying in bed with me and he went, 'You know what? It's working.'"

The Scottish Sun invited Lucy to glam up for an exclusive photoshoot, left.

In the studio, Lucy revealed she's set her sights on becoming the Queen of Opera – after sitting on Her Majesty's throne. The

EXCLUSIVE By NIAMH ANDERSON
Features Writer

singer was asked to perform at the Duchess of York's 55th birthday party at Windsor Castle in October. But Lucy fears The Queen, below right, will never invite her back after sneaking into a ballroom and relaxing in the monarch's chair.

She laughed: "My manager took me to my dressing room to warm up before the performance. It was this massive gold room and I just saw this chair at the end of the room. It had banners around it so you couldn't get in.

"It was her chair, her actual throne. So I snuck in and sat on it.

"I'm sure I'll get in so much trouble for telling you that."

And Lucy admits she was shocked by the Royal Family's antics at the bash which also celebrated 20 years of Children in Crisis – the charity that the Duchess of Windsor, Sarah Ferguson, far right, founded.

The party was attended by Prince Andrew, Princesses Eugenie and Beatrice, Elton John and top models Kate Moss and Naomi Campbell.

Lucy revealed everyone was plastered at the posh bash.

She said: "They're hysterical. Everyone was ped. Fergie obviously loves her drink. She was shouting, 'Come on Lucy, you can do it', because she knew I was ill."

don't know if that was the alcohol. I got a standing ovation from everyone."

Lucy has been on the road non-stop since she came second on BGT in June.

But it hasn't all been plain sailing for the singing starlet.

She was shunned by one of her teachers at Glasgow's Royal Conservatoire of Scotland who claimed Lucy had let the opera world down.

Lucy said: "When I did find out I was going on BGT, there was a bit of hoo-ha about it. It was so frowned upon. But I thought, 'That's my dream'."

"There was one case – and I won't name names – but she said, 'I'm not going to teach you, I have to hold my reputation and you're bringing me down.'"

Lucy felt betrayed by her mentor who was also a good friend.

She added: "I was like, 'Get over yourself'. It got me so angry, but so upset at the same time. She knew I was going for this audition and as soon as it went on TV, she said 'You didn't sing well enough, you're a bad name in the opera world'."

"I thought, 'You know what? Two fingers up to the opera world if that's how they see it. I don't care.'"

Lucy had the last laugh though – her debut album Fantasia shot straight to No1 in the classical charts following its release in October.

As well as landing a multi-album record deal with Sony, she has recently been announced as a performer for the BBC Sports Personality of the Year Awards, taking place at Glasgow's SSE Hydro on December 14.

And the jet-setting singer has just recently arrived home from Hong Kong, where she sang at the 25th anniversary of luxury resort Grand Hyatt.

Lucy is also still in dreamland after supporting Italian opera superstar Andrea Bocelli last month as part of his UK tour.

She said: "I've been asked so many times who I'd like to sing with and when I was confirmed as one of the supporting acts for Andrea Bocelli I couldn't believe it."

"It doesn't get any bigger than Andrea Bocelli."

And unlike her snooty teacher, Lucy is on a mission to make people realise that classical music isn't just for snobs.

She said: "I want Joe Public to listen to my album and to feel like they can do so without the stigma attached to it. At the end of the day, that's what I'm trying to get away from – the snobbery of opera."

"It's still regarded, in my eyes, as elitist. My mum said she wouldn't dare go to an opera because she doesn't feel like she's the right class."

"In this day and age, I want people to see past all that. Opera is for everyone – but you just don't know it yet."

FASHION SHOOT CREDITS
— Dress: from Lissy.
Make-up: Claire McCann.
Hair: Taylor Ferguson.
Stylist: Janis Sue Smith

An accident has changed your life.

You have to fight for your physical and financial health.

You need a heavyweight in your corner.

In your corner: a lawyer who'll fight to get you the treatment you need right now; who knows how to push for the best possible financial outcome; whose practice has been handling personal injury cases for 85 years, and offers a no-win-no-fee arrangement. If you think we could help you, call.

Slater & Gordon
Lawyers

slatergordon.co.uk 0800 884 0149

Slater & Gordon (UK) LLP is authorised and regulated by the Solicitors Regulation Authority and the Financial Conduct Authority (FCA) for insurance mediation activity.

*Aaah, that certainly puts a different slant on what BGT stands for...