Children 'suffer through dental targets'

MANY BRITISH children are "suffering needlessly" because of poor oral health, a charity has said.

Pointing to the fact that tens of thousands of under-10s had to have their decayed teeth removed in just one year, the Oral Health Foundation said the UK is facing a "dental health crisis".

The charity is calling on the Government to overhaul dentistry to make sure there is an enhanced focus on prevention and education.

Last week the British Dental Association (BDA) said dentists are bound by trying to achieve "senseless targets" which means they are forced to provide more curative treatments than preventive care.

President of the Oral Health Foundation, Janet Goodwin, said: "It is absolutely heart-breaking to witness what we are currently experiencing in the UK, to have so many children suffering needlessly due to poor oral health is appalling."
